21. Were there any changes in your person after this experience? yes; no; if yes, describe them.

Yes, linked to the challenges. I have been trying to understand a bit more and now I know a bit more about the refugees in the world. And simple stuff: regardless of the different background, we were both cooking and asking questions about ourselves, “your village looks like our village...” we had the same willingness to be happy and stable

22. Could you briefly describe a pleasant situation during the supporting experience?

The mother of the family, video called her son who was away, it was the first time i saw her smiling. All the rest of the time i was seeing her afraid and insecure.

23. Could you describe a difficult situation during the supporting experience?

A child on the bike in the village, there were all families and Second tree. The child fell down, but everybody was calm, only the mother a bit scared, little blood and then everything good.

8. Do you have any activism experiences? yes; no. If yes, where? summer camps, library, helping kids with special needs, ...
9. What motivates you to engage with Second Tree?

When refugees first came in 2016 I was worried about the situation, I was helping collect food, clothes,...but I wanted something more. I was volunteering with my university in another camp and when the program stopped my professor suggested it.

10. What are the challenges you encountered with Second Tree?

There were a few, the team of volunteers was a bit different from me. Not with the refugees. How it was organised was ok but the volunteers' expectations on communication were challenging. With the refugees we saw many differences, an experience stuck in my life. the problem was that after that there wasn't a plan for the future except for our personal interests. it could have been a platform/a group/ where to post opportunities... something to make it more for a team instead of between individuals. I would have been more sure that I could respond and keep in touch with communication.

understand that it's just like hanging around with friends, it's something really close to our nature, not external. I was feeling guilty that I gained more benefit than the refugees did. I was still in a privileged life and theirs was still the same after two years. they didn't have more options.

22. Could you briefly describe a pleasant situation during the supporting experience?

going to the beach. it was a big challenge for them and us as well (all the naked body conceptions,...). The way we decided to cope with it was great, it gave the option to all of us to be comfortable. each one chose how to be there, but also accepting the option of the others. older people of the families all dressed, and greek volunteers in bikinis, after an hour the uncomfot was overcome very quickly and then we came closer in a really nice way.

23. Could you describe a difficult situation during the supporting experience?

When the refugees asked me to participate in their everyday life more, it was tiring because I had my routine, job, university, and I felt i had to but I couldn't or didn't want to. but then after our communication just fed away so i never dealt with it.

students organisations, mostly about bringing EU students together. not a specific cause. The point was to organise events and invite EU students.

9. What motivates you to engage with Second Tree?

I have been motivated since the refugee crisis started. As a medical student, I had tried to organise a way for the refugees when coming to the emergency department to get support on understanding and been understood. students to help orient people.

10. What are the challenges you encountered with Second Tree?

We were not part of organising, so no challenges. Maybe one was that because our job was kind of to help the families to integrate, we had to overcome the huge cultural difference that there was in some aspects. And interact with children that we knew would have to stay here all their life, explaining the culture and why things are different, and what they should do.

27. Do you think due to the refugees' integration model based on community engagement of Second Tree project, prejudicial barriers regarding the refugees could be reduced or eradicated? yes; no; Why?

because when you see something in the news or through the eyes and mouth of a third person you make an opinion that is not correct. if you meet the people you can change it. there is a lot of racism even among good people, if they knew or got in touch they wouldn't have it.

21. Were there any changes in your person after this experience? yes; no; if yes, describe them.

yes. I understood better the humanitarian situation under the EU, how racist the EU approach is. I made a lot of refugee friends which is very valuable. it changed the things i work with in university, I incorporate many things in what I teach to my students.

22. Could you briefly describe a pleasant situation during the twinning project?

the whole thing of establishing a relationship, meeting specific people, i understand in a different way my present in ioannina. I grew up in a Greece that now is almost extinct, where personal relationships were very valuable. When the refugees came it was like being able to live it again in another way, going away from this disciplinary way we live now. They completely enrich my life. Showed how we could trust each other, share concrete things in our daily life. I escaped from the very formal level that relationships have in urban life or university. also understanding better what privilege is to be me.

23. Could you describe a difficult situation during the twinning project?

It isn't really about the project and it doesnt answer the question, but in general mostly with ngo's officials from the EU and the greek state. There were rapes of kids in camps, and IOM and Unicef knew about it, and when we were talking about it in meetings and thinking about what we could do, they were silent (it was like a "we don't talk about these things, they shouldn't be public, ..."). A 2 and a half years old kid in Agia Eleni was raped, Intersos only relocated the family in Athens. A Greek woman tried to buy a kid from a refugee family, a student raised the issue, we noticed it and managed to avoid it.

21. Were there any changes in your person after this experience? yes; no; if yes, describe them.

Yes, I like to think so. I gained more actual factual knowledge, like about Afghanistan, more compassion, empathy, (both great things), expanded my social network (volunteers, refugees,...), became more aware.

22. Could you briefly describe a pleasant situation during the supporting experience?

they cooked dinner for us, the dad of the family is a chef and it was amazing, you don't get to try afgani food in greece. also beach was nice because the kids were really excited about it.

23. Could you describe a difficult situation during the supporting experience?

I was lucky to have a great family. Personally, what was difficult was coming in touch with ideas and perceptions very different from mine and western world in general. We would speak in english, so we could communicate, but they were saying things about how a woman should behave and it was hard for me to discover people's perspectives about religion, beauty standards, and women's place in society. I tried to question it.

24. There were moments of difficulty due to:

27. Do you think due to the refugees' integration model based on community engagement of Second Tree project, prejudicial barriers regarding the refugees could be reduced or eradicated? yes; no; Why?

complicated opinion on that. On one hand it is really useful because it brings new cultures together, it shows there aren't many differences as we thought. On the other hand, the problem could potentially increase if you are not prepared to handle and overcome situations like that. For example when you come in contact with strong opinions on religions/women/... it can highlight the differences.

31. Could you tell me about an enjoyable experience you had with the twinning project?

When I met Thea, a US volunteer who was giving English lessons. We worked together with Lucas.

Another one was when my wife was about to have a baby. My brother organised for my sister to come to Ioannina. My brother looked at what we could do as tourists in Ioannina and he got the hotel exactly opposite the cave where I was going to help with translations every day. My sister stayed 10 days and I didn't go inside the cave once because I didn't want to go again.

32. Could you tell me about a difficult experience you had with the twinning project?

Nothing particularly difficult. The difficult thing was doing the same thing 5 or 6 times a day like explaining groups the cave and going there (when i was helping translating)

31. Could you tell an enjoyable experience you lived with the twinning project?

When we all went to the restaurant, two people from Greece and a family from the camp. And everyone was very interested, and then laughing and dancing.

32. Could you tell a difficult experience you lived with the twinning project?

The translation. Many refugee families didn't talk english, and the greeks either. There were very few translators.

33. How did you overcome these obstacles?

i did some translation

34. Do you think that the refugees' integration model based on community engagement (like the twinning project) should be considered as? Rate from 1 to 5:

36. Do you think due to the refugees' integration model based on community engagement of Second Tree's project, prejudicial barriers regarding the refugees could be reduced or eradicated? yes; no; Why?

yes, but needs more support, it would be nice if greek people would understand the arabic culture. When you see news with an airport falling down people think flying is dangerous, but it's not. Analogy for the refugees in the news. "they want to steal, change our culture and kill our traditions". When you talk about real numbers, that's good, and that they are their own individuals, with their own culture.
